Triplets reunited after 69 years

Three triplets finally had the opportunity to celebrate their birthday together – at the age of seventy.

The children, originally named Florence, John, and May Hodder, were separated when they were babies. Their mother had died a day after they were born and their father John, a gardener, already had six other children. He didn't think he could look after them. So they were adopted by three different families in different parts of Britain and given new names: Gill, David, and Helena.

The story of their reunion began more than 25 years ago when David's wife applied to a government office for his birth certificate and discovered that David was one of triplets. David was absolutely amazed. Although the office could not give him any information about the other two triplets, he soon made contact with his sister Florence after putting an advertisement in a national magazine. Florence and David were now 44 years old. But it was another 25 years before they found Helena.

They could not find any records of the adoption, and although they advertised in newspapers and magazines, this time nobody answered. Finally, after they had appeared in a BBC TV documentary and contacted an organization which supports adopted children, they discovered that documents about Helena's adopted family existed. Unfortunately they did not have the legal right to see them. However, they appealed to a judge who decided that they should be allowed to see the documents.

David and Florence began investigating. They contacted Helena's son and finally Helena herself. Helena's adoptive parents had told her that she was one of triplets but she never thought she would see the other two. She felt quite nervous about meeting her brother and sister after such a long time, but when she had met them she said, 'It's absolutely wonderful to know I really belong to a real family.'

The triplets are now planning to go on holiday together to Devon, and to meet each other as often as possible.

Hi
Attached is a photo of Liverpool, where I live. It's a big city on the river Mersey, and it's famous for the Beatles and for its football team. Please tell me about your town. Where exactly is it, and how big is it? What's the most beautiful part of town? Are there any famous buildings? What are the best and worst things about living there?
Please write soon.
Best wishes
